Inspector J. Vance.
Vancouver Police.

Dear Sir,

I am greatly interested in a report which appeared recently in the Daily Mail of a mechanical bloodhound which you are said to have invented. What interests me especially is the statement that scent produces a distinctive character pattern which could be recognised by the spectroscope. So far as I know this is the first time that scent and light have been correlated, as light, electricity, and sound have been for many years. If you have published anything on the subject I should be glad to purchase the same if within my means, and any pamphlets would be greatly appreciated, especially if of a scientific nature, provided of course they do not deal with confidential details.

Yours faithfully
